Introduction to LGBT Studies Critical Review

engl 466 / sec. A / winter quarter 2012-13 / chang

This class takes up as central preoccupations: What are the key concepts, moves, and key terms of the interdisciplinary fields that make up lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer studies? How might literature help reveal, define, trouble, and critique those concepts? In other words, how might we read literature (or any other text really) as "complexly coded cultural artifacts?" (Lister & Wells 457). What does literature tells about our selves, our communities, our cultures, and our worlds? What makes literature (compared to other kinds of art or cultural production) important? If the answers to the above questions provide a way to engage, analyze, and politicize literature, then how might we think about these further questions: What does LGBTQ literature mean? How might we queer literature?

Review of a Text

For this assignment, you must select a novel or film, one that we have not substantively covered in class. Do a little research into the texts that are considered queer, part of LGBTQ studies, or might be queered or reimagined as queer. Select a novel or film that you believe fits the theme and goals of the course, a text that you must argue belongs in a class called "Critical Inquiries: Introduction to LGBT Studies." An outstanding text will engage the ideas and grinding edges of the course in multiple ways and will speak to the other texts included in the syllabus. When picking a text, avoid the obvious, the superficial, or the easy answer; a creative risk or interpretative leap might be to choose a text that engages the questions, perhaps in an against the grain way, of the class.

You must read or watch the text. Consider the theoretical and interpretative questions we have been asking and trying to answer all quarter. Then write a short 500-700 word critical review of the text explicating and expressing why the text would make a strong addition to the course syllabus. Use the following questions as guidelines and jumping off points:

- -What kind of text do you want to review? What kind of text would fit well within the scope of the course?
- -Who is the text by? Is it someone already included in the syllabus? Would your text replace a current text?
- —What makes the text worth re-reading? What features and qualities make it ideal for the class?
- —Most importantly, what does the text tell us about the importance of literature? About our culture? About our world? What are the critical questions the text asks, complicates, and answers?

Your critical review must be more than just a descriptive 'book report.' Plot, characters, setting, themes, and summary will be a necessary portion of your review, but the majority of your writing will be analyzing and articulating why the text befits the course. You might want to take a look at book reviews in a scholarly journal (for English), in the New Yorker magazine, or the Washington Post or The New York Times. Your critical review should offer specific arguments and concrete details drawn from the text itself.

Guidelines and Due Dates

Format: 500 to 700 words, typed, no title page, single-spaced, block format, proper heading posted to the class TumbIr, use the title line: "CRITICAL REVIEW: <your title> by <your name>"

include bibliography, useful links if necessary

Due: by the end of the quarter

no later than Monday, March 11