

Short Paper 5: Revision Of

eng 3060j / spring 2019 / ohio university / chang

Revision is an important part of the writing process. It provides you the opportunity to return to your paper with a critical eye, to reconsider or rethink your argument, to review and reorganize your evidence, and to respond to and polish your language. In other words, revision is a process of “re-visioning” or “re-seeing” what you have done and what you might do next with your paper. For this assignment, you may select one of your Creative Responses or one of your Short Papers to revise for a better grade. Once you have selected your paper, you must set aside enough time for revision. Significant and meaningful revisions cannot be done in just a few minutes. Again, revision is more than just proofreading and editing and correcting typos or formatting. You must do more than just fix spelling, grammar, and punctuation (though these details are important). You must do more than just make sure you have complete sentences, subclaims, strong evidence, and good transitions. You must do more than just “fix” what you received comment on. Successful revision requires that you look at the big picture and how the little stuff all fits and flows together to better satisfy the assignment at hand. The grade for the revision will replace the original grade. Take the revision seriously lest you earn a lower grade for an inadequate revision.

Guidelines and Due Dates

- Outcomes: writing for specific purposes; approach writing as a recursive process; revise work based on feedback from peers, tutors, or instructors; revise at both global and local levels; see also the outcomes of the original paper assignment
- Format: follow the manuscript requirements for the original paper
- Draft Due: Monday, March 25, uploaded to Blackboard and to your Google peer review folder, by 11:59 PM
- Due: Monday, April 1, via Blackboard, by 11:59 PM
-

Short Paper 5: Revision Of

eng 3060j / spring 2019 / ohio university / chang

Revision is an important part of the writing process. It provides you the opportunity to return to your paper with a critical eye, to reconsider or rethink your argument, to review and reorganize your evidence, and to respond to and polish your language. In other words, revision is a process of “re-visioning” or “re-seeing” what you have done and what you might do next with your paper. For this assignment, you may select one of your Creative Responses or one of your Short Papers to revise for a better grade. Once you have selected your paper, you must set aside enough time for revision. Significant and meaningful revisions cannot be done in just a few minutes. Again, revision is more than just proofreading and editing and correcting typos or formatting. You must do more than just fix spelling, grammar, and punctuation (though these details are important). You must do more than just make sure you have complete sentences, subclaims, strong evidence, and good transitions. You must do more than just “fix” what you received comment on. Successful revision requires that you look at the big picture and how the little stuff all fits and flows together to better satisfy the assignment at hand. The grade for the revision will replace the original grade. Take the revision seriously lest you earn a lower grade for an inadequate revision.

Guidelines and Due Dates

- Outcomes: writing for specific purposes; approach writing as a recursive process; revise work based on feedback from peers, tutors, or instructors; revise at both global and local levels; see also the outcomes of the original paper assignment
- Format: follow the manuscript requirements for the original paper
- Draft Due: Monday, March 25, uploaded to Blackboard and to your Google peer review folder, by 11:59 PM
- Due: Monday, April 1, via Blackboard, by 11:59 PM